REVIEW OF THE POLICE FORCES
OF THE UNITED KINGDOM BY HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

CEREMONIAL

The Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh arrive at 3 p.m. and are received by the Secretary of State for the Home Department and the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Her Majesty is conducted to the dais where she is received with a Royal Salute. She drives down the three lines of the parade and returns to the dais.

The parade then marches past Her Majesty in columns of eight.

14TH JULY 1954

FOREWORD

AT THIS Royal Review of the Police there are present contingents from every police force in the United Kingdom. In these forces there is a total of 76,000 men and women, of whom about 10,000 are on parade. The parade includes regular policemen and policewomen, mounted police, special constables, police cadets, police dogs and police vehicles. There are also present representatives of the special constabularies maintained by the Service Departments, the British Transport Commission and certain other authorities.

By a long tradition the police are a local service. There are 158 separate forces in England, Wales and Scotland. In London the Metropolitan Police is under the authority of the Home Secretary. Each of the other forces is administered by a local committee, consisting of, or including, elected representatives. The Home Secretary and the Secretary of State for Scotland have the ultimate responsibility for ensuring the efficiency of these forces and for making regulations on those matters where uniformity is desirable, such as pay and conditions of service. The Royal Ulster Constabulary is under the direct authority of the Minister for Home Affairs in the Government of Northern Ireland.

Each police force has its distinctive tradition and its local pride. Each relies on the support, and if need be the active assistance, of the members of the community which it serves; and those communities in turn take a proper pride in their police. But though separate, these forces have a unity of purpose which enables them to deal with problems which transcend their boundaries. That unity in diversity is expressed in to-day's parade.
